Making an Impression: Media Interviewing

June 13, 2013

What We Will Cover

Why do we care about the Media?
How do you attract media attention?
How do you deal with media inquiries?
Crisis management—in about 10 minutes.
Social Media—in about 10 minutes (telling your own story)

The Good, The Bad and The Ugly
Making an Impression:
Media Interviewing

The Good

Good media relations:
1) Builds your reputation and credibility and that of your organization
2) Wins friends and influences people
3) Earns votes and public support
4) Builds a relationship that can payoff when things go bad

The Bad

- Stephen Duckett—I’m Eating My Cookie

The Ugly

- In 2008, Senator Norman Coleman was accused in the media of improperly accepting gifts from someone.
- During a press conference, his campaign manager, Cullen Sheehan, may have stayed on message a bit too much.
- http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=VySnplOaUrl
What He Should Have Said

• Duckett: "The health and well being of the people of Alberta is my first concern, and I am in constant meetings with the health care professionals best suited to restore our emergency services to their proper levels. If you want to walk with me to my next meeting I’ll try to answer your questions, but I have the utmost confidence in my spokesperson to fully brief you on what’s happening at the scheduled media briefing."

Why the Media Matters

• The capacity to influence

• Key people care what’s in the media

• Media, through social media, can amplify messages
Making an Impression:
Media Interviewing

The Media Matters

• On “a typical day,” 78 percent of Americans say they get news from their local TV news station
• LATimes.com: 24.9 million unique monthly visitors
• SFGate.com: 196 million monthly page views

News Is:

• Compelling
• Informative
• Local • Timely • Interesting
• Significant

Television Typically:

• Less message; more personality
• You saying what you chose to say
• If not live, selective edits
• Short bursts of information
Making an Impression: Media Interviewing

Radio Typically:

- More message; less personality
- You saying what you choose to say
- If not live, selective edits
- Short bursts of information

Print Typically:

- More details of the message, less personality
- Usually allows for more detail, more background information than TV or radio
- Allows the reporter to write impressions of you, select the quotes, construct the story
- Fails to capture nuance or humor

“If you can’t explain something simply, you don’t understand it well.”

“Everything should be made as simple as possible, but not simpler.”
Albert Einstein
Making an Impression: Media Interviewing

"I'll start with the weekly progress report. Ms. London, on my right, will act as acronym and jargon translator."

Plans are worthless, but planning is everything.

-- Dwight D. Eisenhower

Social Media

Twitter, Facebook, YouTube, Linked in, Pinterest, Ahhhhhhhhhhhhhhhhh----

“Stop me before I Tweet again!”

How many of these do I Really need to care about?

Social Media = Amplifier
Making an Impression: Media Interviewing

How To Attract Media Attention

• Develop the story
  – Why should people care about this issue?
• Pitch to a single reporter?
  – A good story you want to share with a reporter you trust
• General media availability?
  – Visual, general interest story with mass public appeal
  – The Media Advisory

Message Development

The three C’s

  Clear-
  Concise-
  Connect back to main messages-
Making an Impression:
Media Interviewing

Key Messages

• 27: Words in print media quote

• 9: Seconds in broadcast media sound bite

• 3: Messages reported in print or broadcast media

Building Credibility

• Eye contact
• Strong voice
• Good posture
• Appropriate dress

You Are What You Wear

• No stripes or checks
• No gaudy jewelry/watches/dangles
• Avoid black and white together
• No oranges and bright reds
• What works: blues, charcoal, tans, pastels
Making an Impression: Media Interviewing

How To Deal With Media Inquiries

– Don’t feel rushed to meet their deadline
– If you need time to research an issue, take it
– Follow through on promises (return calls etc.)
– Refer to other sources or resources if appropriate
– Every media contact is an opportunity
– Reporters remember favors—so should you

What I Learned in Kindergarten

• Tell the truth
• It’s OK to say you’re sorry
• I don’t know is OK
• Your policies are your friends
• Don’t let perfection be the death of your message

Never Say No Comment

• Nonprofits, government agencies and local businesses rely on public support
• The public expects accountability
• Lose public trust and your organization will collapse
Making an Impression:
Media Interviewing

Issue

vs.

Crisis

A crisis is an issue that was handled poorly.

First Steps:

• Act swiftly
• How much of the crisis do you own?
• Choose the spokesperson
• Show leadership
Hope is not a Strategy

• What’s the worst that can happen?
• Build “What if …..?” into your staff meetings
• Learn from other’s mistakes and successes

People want to know that you care before they care what you know

• Compassion
  – Empathy: “Our hearts go out to those…

• Conviction
  – You and your team can do the job

• Optimism
  – You will succeed (tempered with reality)

Every Crisis Has a

• Victim
• Villain
• Hero

Which will you be?
Managing Constituencies

- Tell key people before they hear it in the media
- Take your lumps
- People hit hardest: No. 1
- Then layers - community, politicos, general public

Stay In Your Lane
Making an Impression: Media Interviewing

Perspective

Resources

Centers for Disease Control & Prevention
www.bt.cdc.gov/cerc/
Center for Risk Communication
www.centerforriskcommunication.org
Peter Sandman: Responding to Community Outrage: Strategies for Effective Risk Communications
www.psandman.com
Message Mapping
Making an Impression:
Media Interviewing

Why Practice?

Practice doesn’t make perfect — but lack of practice makes terrible

Practice can improve skills, help you think on your feet and survive to fight another day

Practice — and review will help you see/hear bad or awkward behavior that detracts from your messaging

---

Why Practice?

What you say is important – how you say it, and how you look saying it on TV is just as important

Marshall McLuhan: “The Medium is the Message”
Short Sound Bite Secrets
www.ca-ilg.org/working-media
December 2012

“That’s not what I said!” That is a common complaint people have after seeing their interview incorporated in a radio or television piece. But ask yourself, was this really taken out of context, or did the reporter just not have time to include the entire response?

Interviews may last for 10 or 15 minutes, but just a few lines will likely appear in the story. Reporters have to tell the entire story in one to two minutes (and sometimes even less).

The secret to getting one’s message in radio and television news stories is to make it easy for the reporter to use them by responding to questions with short, concise answers. This is known in media jargon as a “sound bite.”

Key Concepts to Remember

Delivering a key message or solid sound bite requires skill and technique. Outlined below are several techniques for elected officials to consider when responding to a reporter’s questions.

Develop Your Key Message in Advance

When a reporter calls or emails, take a few minutes to try to find out what information the reporter hopes to get from the interview and who the audience is. Develop two to three key messages to emphasize. The way to do this is to make them in single sentences in the active voice. Work with agency staff to provide supporting data and sync messages for consistency with the latest media strategy. Keep information simple and easy to understand.

Be Prepared

To ensure a successful interview, know and practice messages. Before the interview, write up a list of anticipated questions and practice the answers.

The Institute is grateful to Jann Taber for preparing this piece. Ms. Taber has thirty years’ experience in media relations working with government officials, public agencies, non-profit organizations, and private firms.
Have someone ask these questions as well as some surprise questions to practice concise answers. Use a clock or stopwatch to time answers. Aim for seven seconds.

Speaking faster to squeeze an answer into seven seconds is cheating! Speak at a pace that allows clear articulation of each word. Practice, but do not memorize answers. The goal is to sound spontaneous and conversational.

Make Answers Simple

Answer questions as if speaking to a friend. Do not use jargon, acronyms, wonky terms or complex words.

One would never say to a friend, “the financial condition of the agency is difficult because the revenue stream is not keeping pace with the expenditures and we face the possibility of having a deficit.” Instead, one might say, “Things are tough right now because we don’t have enough money to pay the agency bills.”

Reporters are more likely to use sound bites that average resident can relate to and understand.

Be Relaxed and Personable

One of the reasons Ronald Reagan and Bill Clinton were so successful was their ability to speak to YOU and only you. When answering a question, imagine speaking to someone. When being interviewed by a television reporter, look at the reporter when answering the questions, not at the camera. The reporter is the conduit for getting information to the community, not the end consumer of the information.

Remain Focused

It’s okay to pause for a few moments before answering a question. This provides an opportunity to focus on one’s answers. Stick to one subject at a time. Lead with the most important point first. Then give an explanation or additional information to back it up.

Try to include your two to three main points as often as possible. The interview is likely to be edited prior to publishing or broadcasting. Repeating the main points reduces the possibility that key messages will be edited out.

“If you can't explain it to a six year old, you don't understand it yourself.”

- Albert Einstein

Additional Resource for Working with the Media

A companion piece to this tip sheet, “Media Relations Tips for Newly Elected Officials,” is available on the Institute’s website: www.ca-ilg.org/working-media
Speak Clearly and Confidently

Most people use non-words like “umm” and “uhh” unconsciously. Not only do non-words fill up precious time, they can make a speaker sound boring, uneducated and unsure. Instead, pause without sound.

Stay Away From Traps

Avoid filling in silences. After responding to the question and delivering one’s key message, stop talking and wait for the next question. Many reporters will pause to make sure the interviewee is finished. Natural human reaction is to fill in these silences with more talking. Stick to the message, give the answer, and stop talking.

Sometimes a reporter will ask a question one cannot answer or does not want to answer. Say one does not have the information they need. If it is a policy not to discuss certain issues, it is fair to say "It's our policy not to discuss XYZ" and then bridge on to what the agency can talk about. Never say “no comment.” It sounds like the agency is hiding something.

Avoid saying things “off the record.” If it was not meant for the public’s ears, don’t share it with a reporter. Avoid saying anything you don’t want as the lead story of the news.

Sometimes a question may be based on wrong information. A good strategy is to lead with correction information, if possible without framing the information as a denial.

The Basic Questions

Reporters will generally ask basic who, what, when, where, why and how questions.

Who

Who is most affected by this issue?
Who will foot the bill for this initiative?

What

What does an official know about an issue, and what still needs to be learned?
What does this mean for a city, county, or region?
What do officials see taking shape because of this development?
What would it take to create change on this issue?

When

When did officials first become aware of this development?
When do officials think this will be resolved?

Why

Why did this happen?
Why should residents or voters care?

How

How does an official make a difference in addressing this issue?
How can constituents take action or access additional information?

A clear and concise response to a reporter’s questions provides an opportunity to convey important information to the public.
Speak in Complete Thoughts

It is good practice to include part of the question in one’s answer to ensure a complete thought. Remember, a quote is going to stand-alone so it should be easily understood without any set-up.

Question: What should people know about staying safe in this area’s hiking trails?

Answer: If you want to stay safe when hiking in the “City of / County of X”, the single most important thing to do is always stay on the marked trails.

When appropriate, consider starting each response with your agency’s name.

Question: What efforts are being taken to conserve resources?

Answer: “The ‘City of / County of’ X has established aggressive sustainability goals to help conserve resources and save money.”

Overcome Your Fear

Microphones, cameras and lights can often create nervousness. The practiced seven second answer may turn into a long, rambling answer spoken too quickly in a real interview situation. Nervousness may cause one’s voice to go up a pitch, or break up completely, which can undermine one’s credibility.

One option is to practice to increase one’s comfort delivering messages in a real interview situation.

Conclusion

Interviews are an opportunity for an elected official to deliver a message in a clear, concise manner. Thinking through key messages and using these techniques to shape sound bites will help establish credibility and poise. Remember, the reporter is talking to the official as an expert. Media needs officials and officials need the media, so be prepared and welcome this opportunity to bring key information to the public.
Acknowledgments

Special thanks to the following individuals whose expertise contributed to this publication:

Pat Brink, Brink Public Relations
Becky Johnson, Director of Public Affairs, Siemens Building Technologies
Erik Johnson, Government and Media Affairs, Sacramento Area Council of Governments
David Liebler, Director of Public Affairs and Member Services, California State Association of Counties
Vonnie Madigan, Principal, The Strategist
Stacie Oulton, Public Information Officer, City of Lakewood, Colorado
Nancy Pearl, Communications Consultant
Christina Ragsdale, Communications Manager, Sacramento Metropolitan Air Quality Management District
Louis R. Reyes, Communications Director, Los Angeles County Office of the Assessor
Eva Spiegel, Communications Director, League of California Cities
David Urbinato, Public Information Officer, Phoenix Parks and Recreation Department

The Institute for Local Government also thanks the California Association of Public Information Officials and the Public Relations Society of America, California Capital Chapter for their support of this publication.

All decisions about the final content and formatting of this publication were made by the Institute for Local Government.
Media Relations Tips for Newly Elected Officials
www.ca-ilg.org/working-media
December 2012

Working with the media is an integral part of being an elected official. The relationship is interdependent as elected officials need the media to amplify their voices and communicate to constituents.

Media needs local officials as an authoritative source of information. Interviews with local officials is an important source of information just as attending public meetings and reviewing agency documents.

Rapport with the media is essential in accomplishing the objectives of an elected official. An effective working relationship with the media (television, radio, print, blogs, etc.) can enhance the day-to-day work of an official and help in crisis situations. Accessibility to an agency and its elected officials also fosters a greater sense of public transparency.

Reporters Are People Too

As is the case with all humans, no two reporters are alike. They differ in their levels of experience and by the medium (radio, TV print and blogs) within which they work. It is the reporter’s job to report accurate information in a relatively quick timeframe. The better one understands and work within the reporter’s constraints, the more effectively one communicates with the public.

Print reporters are more likely to be assigned to a “beat” which may include local agency or specific issues, such as education, environment, business, health, and so on. A challenge that local agency officials often face is that the “local government beat” can be the starter beat for less experienced reporters. This creates an opportunity to help reporters learn the intricacies of government issues, functions and procedures. Pointing them to the Institute’s “Local Government 101” materials for background is one option (www.ca-ilg.org/localgovt101).

Newspaper reporters typically need and/or want quotes, background, details, facts, figures, graphics, photos, etc. More often than not, daily newspaper reporters will do their interviews by phone in preparation for their story to run the next day. A larger story may not run immediately and the reporter may choose to conduct interviews in person.

The Institute is grateful to Jann Taber for preparing this piece. Ms. Taber has thirty years’ experience in media relations working with and for government officials, public agencies, non-profit organizations, and private firms.
In contrast, broadcast reporters, both radio and television, are less commonly assigned to specific beats. This means they tend to know a little bit about a lot of issues and are often learning the issue as they are reporting on it. Providing them with background information before the interview can accelerate their learning curve. This can result in better interview questions on tape or camera.

Broadcast reporters have to distill complex issues into a very limited amount of time, typically less than a minute. They are not going to want or need mounds of information, so synthesize key messages into a few concise sentences. Also, whereas radio reporters capture words solely with sound, TV reporters also need visuals to go with their interviewee’s words. Such visuals offer another tool to help convey information and key messages, so consider working with your agency’s staff to supply them with the appropriate resources.

Best Practices for Working with Reporters

Reporters have a job to do. They are talking with local agency officials, and probably others, to gain information on a story they are producing. They will often ask difficult questions that may seem antagonistic, but are usually not. They are simply trying to get the job done. Regardless of their demeanor, it is important to stay calm and:

- Be Responsive. Reporters operate on deadlines. To do their jobs, they need a timely response. Understand reporters’ deadlines and meet or beat them. Establishing a reputation for responding quickly to reporter inquiries will earn respect and appreciation. Playing hard-to-get may cause the media to wonder what one is hiding, which may encourage the media to dig for something to uncover.

- Be Prepared. Find out what information the reporter is seeking and then, whenever possible, take the time to prepare for an interview by gathering facts, figures and key messages that will be responsive to the questions the reporter is likely to ask. It is okay to have this information as a reference during an interview when not on camera. Unless one has to, do not wing it. In the instance of a crisis situation, it is wise to have a standard holding statement such as, “I want to help you with your story, but I need to gather more facts before I can answer any questions. I know we all want to get the story right, so I will contact you within the hour to give you an update.” Then, be sure to follow through.
• Be Accessible. Reporters generally want access to elected officials instead of their spokespersons. Reporters not only want it, they need it to do their job. The quickest way to tick off a reporter is put up barriers.

• Be Friendly. The golden rule applies. Treat the media as one would like to be treated. Get to know the reporters that are covering local issues. The goal is not to be best friends with reporters, but to have a friendly relationship.

• Be Real. Authenticity matters to both reporters and constituents. The goal is to sound knowledgeable, use plain language, and be sincere. If more information is needed to respond, make the reporter aware and follow-up promptly.

• Be Concise. Reporters want and need good quotes. To be quoted (and not misquoted), keep statements (both written and spoken) short, relevant and interesting. Do not use jargon, acronyms or wonky terms. A written quote should be one or two short sentences. Radio and television will edit down a statement to sound bites that are only three to seven seconds long, on average. Avoid the temptation to talk too much. Don’t speculate or speak in hypotheticals; stick to the facts.

• Be Courteous. Sometimes one may not have much knowledge or interest in a topic to provide what a reporter needs. In this case, say, “Thank you for thinking of me for your story, I don’t think I am the best source for your topic.” If possible, try to suggest another contact.

• Be Proactive. Sometimes it is appropriate to reach out to reporters if there is a story that needs to be covered. Do not hesitate to suggest stories or offer responses to newsworthy events before being asked.

• Be Accurate. Double-check and even triple-check any facts and figures used in interviews. Once inaccurate information is distributed, it’s hard to pull it back. The risk is that accidental inaccuracy will be mistaken for dishonesty. Let the reporter know one needs to look up information and get back to them before the deadline.

• Be Careful. Assume that everything is “on the record” and will be attributed. Don’t say anything that shouldn’t be included in a news story. Never go “off the record.” A reporter can get confused when reading back over his/her notes over what was “off the record” or they may just decide it’s too good to pass up, and betray your trust. If one cannot say it on the record, do not say it.

“Our most tragic error may have been our inability to establish rapport and a confidence with the press...”
-Lyndon B. Johnson
• Be Aware. Be careful not to let a reporter put words in your mouth. Reporters may ask questions in a certain way, leading an official to repeat what he or she said. Any part of a response may be used in a story; be aware of tactics and say what is best for the issue at hand, not what the reporter is looking for. Be careful not to fill in long pauses by the reporter; stick to the question and answer concisely.

• Be Cool. Temperament is important in an interview. Staying calm and avoid expressing anger and/or frustration.

• Be Honest. Honesty is critical to both the media’s and public’s perceptions of local officials’ integrity and trustworthiness. Avoid responding with “no comment” as it sounds as though there is something to hide.

• Be Mindful. Consider the interview environment in determining time, location and topic. If it is at home or office, take into account what you leave on your desk and walls.

What Makes News

The basic components of every news story are: who, what, when, where, why and how. But what makes something worthy of news coverage goes far beyond these basics. The following ten elements determine newsworthiness:

• Controversy/Conflict. Controversy is the #1 element that creates news. Conflict is in ample supply at the local level. Championing a worthy cause or resolving a difficult conflict is likely to be newsworthy.

• Timing/Relevance. News is new information. It can also be something that is happening right now or that has just occurred. News must be fresh and current to be relevant. Elected officials are wise to stay on top of what issues local media are covering, should they be asked to comment on the developments of the day.

• Notoriety/Celebrity. The better known the person, business or organization, the more newsworthy the story. Local officials are newsworthy because of their positions as decision-makers. Reporters closely watch what decision-makers say and do and what they have said and done.

• Impact/Consequence. Consequence is how the information contained in the release impacts viewers, listeners and readers. The more people affected, the more likely something will get news coverage.
• Nearness/Proximity. The closer the event is to the news audience, the more news value it has. Although state and national news gets covered in local media markets, the majority of coverage is on news close to home. Reporters sometimes want a local perspective on a state or national issue.

• Change/Gridlock. Change, the potential for change and, sometimes, a lack of change is newsworthy.

• Action/Drama. Doing something is more newsworthy than having an opinion about it. The more dramatic the action, the greater the news value. This is particularly true for television, which needs more than a talking head to create a story visually.

• Tangible/Understandable. The abstract has less news value than the concrete. Take the time to work with agency staff to make agency facts and figures understandable and relatable to the public.

• Emotion/Human Interest. A story about people that generates any type of emotional response – inspiration, awe, happiness, sadness, anger, and so on – has an element of human interest. People like to hear about other people’s triumphs and failures. That is why tabloids and daytime TV shows are so popular.

• Rare/Unique. A highly unusual, rare or unique situation has high news value as John B. Bogart famously observed “A dog bites a man, that is not news, because it happens so often. But if a man bites a dog, that is news.”

Conclusion

Building and maintaining relationships with media is an important aspect of public service. Elected officials face a variety of challenges along the road of public service. In all occasions, having an effective relationship with media can serve an official and an agency well in efforts to distribute accurate and genuine public information. How an elected official relates to the media and reporters covering an agency will have a direct impact on the type of coverage that occurs.

As a newly elected official, learn the role and needs of media and reporters, as well as the demands of public office. If done authentically, the relationship between reporter and elected official will likely strengthen. When reporters have greater accessibility and confidence in the elected official and the public agency providing information, a mutually beneficial relationship develops and the public is better informed.
Acknowledgments

Special thanks to the following individuals whose expertise contributed to this publication:

Pat Brink, Brink Public Relations
Becky Johnson, Director of Public Affairs, Siemens Building Technologies
Erik Johnson, Government and Media Affairs, Sacramento Area Council of Governments
David Liebler, Director of Public Affairs and Member Services, California State Association of Counties
Vonnie Madigan, Principal, The Strategist
Stacie Oulton, Public Information Officer, City of Lakewood, Colorado
Nancy Pearl, Communications Consultant
Christina Ragsdale, Communications Manager, Sacramento Metropolitan Air Quality Management District
Louis R. Reyes, Communications Director, Los Angeles County Office of the Assessor
Eva Spiegel, Communications Director, League of California Cities
David Urbinato, Public Information Officer, Phoenix Parks and Recreation Department

The Institute for Local Government also thanks the California Association of Public Information Officials and the Public Relations Society of America, California Capital Chapter for their support of this publication.

All decisions about the final content and formatting of this publication were made by the Institute for Local Government.
ABOUT THE CSAC INSTITUTE

The California State Association of Counties (CSAC) is the voice of California’s 58 counties at the state and federal level. The Association’s long-term objective is to significantly improve the fiscal health of all California counties – from Alpine County with a little more than 1,200 people to Los Angeles County with more than 10 million – so they can adequately meet the demand for vital public programs and services. CSAC also places a strong emphasis on educating the public about the value and need for county programs and services.

The CSAC Institute for Excellence in County Government is a professional, practical continuing education program for county officials. The experience is designed to expand the capacity and capability of county elected officials and senior executives to provide extraordinary services to their communities. The Institute is a program of CSAC and was established in 2008 with the first courses offered in early 2009.

For more information please visit www.csacinstitute.org.